Epreuve d'anglais du Baccalauréat Professionnel
(toutes spécialités du secteur tertiaire)
Session de juin 2003 - durée : 2 heures / coefficient : 2

NEVER TOO YOUNG

- 1 Andrew Butt, 20, is managing director of Enable Software, a company with an annual turnover of £1 million. He has 16 employees, flies a helicopter, owns two homes and a Mercedes, and travels the world.
- 5 The company that Andrew founded three years ago with his partner, Denys Shortt, helps businesses to manage and develop web sites, intranet and other areas. The idea was simple. "So much technology, including business software, seemed to have been designed by people showing off their technical skills rather than making it as easy as possible to use," says Andrew. "I decided to create software that even the most technophobic company director could use."
- 10 He aimed to ensure that if a director wanted to change something on his website or add a new piece of information to his intranet, he could do so without calling in expensive IT people. Companies loved it. In a year, Enable has sold more than £ 1 million of software.
- Andrew had a fascination for computers from an early age and spent every evening after school at his PC. At 12, he got his first taste of working with computers in the real world
- 15 15 when his father, an accountant, allowed him to help out at a local helicopter company near his home in Coventry. "Almost as soon as I got there, I noticed that all their filing was done by hand. It seemed so inefficient that I decided to transfer everything on to a computer for them."
- Impressed with his initiative, the firm owners allowed him to work in other areas. Soon he 20 was inventing new ways of marketing the business and helping out with the accounts. At 14, he set up a one-man business selling computer hardware and solving computer problems. "I had learnt much by then and had a captive market in the people I had met at the helicopter company" he says.
- The business cost nothing to set up and turnover hit £ 12,000 within six months. With 25 business booming, he was keen to leave school. His parents agreed, provided that he had a private tutor to help him to pass his school examinations. By then, the internet was taking off and Andrew could see the business opportunities in it. He decided to add website design and development to his business, and was soon working on more than 1,000 sites. At 16, he joined forces with Denys Shortt, a distributor of hi-tech products.
- 30 Andrew is an ideal role model for other young entrepreneurs. His message : "Age is not a problem. Just so long as you have total confidence in yourself, your ability and your products, you can succeed."
